Pizza is often associated with a popular pizza place--especially among my family and at my school, which serves their pizza every day--called Dominoes. Personally, I don't believe that Dominoes deserves as much hype as it has in reference to its' pizza quality. The crust is often flaky, dry, thin, and excessively crunchy, which just pushes all the wrong buttons for me. Their additional menu items are a nice addition, though, which could be the reason why they are so popular. Despite the fact that it is not my favorite pizza place, I won't deny that their chicken wings and garlic knots are delicious. While this somewhat makes up for what their pizzas lack, I still believe that there are better options out there, and the best option is Little Caesars, hands down. I don't understand what it is that makes their bread so much better than other pizza places, but they do their bread right there. Little Caesars' pizzas have all that I look for in a crust; they are always soft, full, and chewy, as all bread should be. While their pizza is certainly superior to Dominoes', what's even better is their breadsticks. They are much simpler than Dominoes' garlic knots, but they taste twice as good as them. They are absolutely delicious, and I have many friends that can agree with me on this--they also love Little Caesars more. Their food also always makes much better leftovers than Dominoes'; Dominoes leftovers are often moist and the delivery is never as good as it was when it was fresh, but no matter how many days its' been in your fridge, Little Caesars always tastes just as good as it did when you brought it home.
